Introduction
Traffic safety is a key element of public safety. This is particularly true as the number of traffic fatalities across the world remain at unacceptable levels. Law enforcement and other government agencies as well as community organizations play a key role in maintaining safe roadways and communities. The International Association of Chiefs of Police is dedicated to promoting traffic safety and recognizing those organizations that excel in this area.

Eligible applicants include sworn members of state, county, municipal, college/university, tribal, and international law enforcement agencies; state highway safety offices; and local organizations involved in addressing traffic safety issues in their communities.

Accomplishments must have taken place within two years of the application open period.
