Making violence against women a law enforcement priority

“Over the years I have attended many conferences. The presentations, organization, and quality of presenters at the Leadership Institute will remain in my mind as one of the best.”
—Chief Carol Sletner
Roseville Police, MN

“The Institute was a complete success for me. I learned so much and am motivated to set new policies and enhance the response of my officers to the crimes of violence against women.”
—Chief Kenneth Donato
Ossining Town Police, NY

“This entire experience was wonderful. Everyone in law enforcement needs this training. My whole department and community will benefit.”
—Chief Michael Crooke
Cumberland Police, IN

Alexandria, VA 22314
IACP's National Law Enforcement Leadership Institute on Violence Against Women is an unprecedented opportunity for law enforcement executives to assess their agency's current response to crimes of violence against women and identify strategies to improve their ability to meet the needs of the community.

Together with a team of expert faculty, law enforcement executives from across the country will spend time:

- Exploring innovative approaches for investigating crimes of violence against women
- Networking with colleagues to share challenges as well as solutions
- Learning ways to maximize assistance to victims while holding perpetrators accountable
- Developing practical proactive plans to enhance agency efforts

Action

Join this national effort to create innovative, coordinated interventions to address and prevent domestic violence, sexual assault, stalking, and human trafficking.

- Build understanding
- Enhance communication
- Clarify priorities
- Develop policies
- Identify tools
- Promote action
- Effect change

Justice
